SATURDAY, AUGUST 6, 1881.

JUSTICE MORRAN, of the Jefferson Market Police Court, New York, was overcome by heat yesterday morning, and could not hold court.—Exchange.

It is said to witness the spread of Washington malaria.

THERE WILL BE no question, as was feared, as to the nature of the death of Abdul Aziz, the ex-Sultan. He was immolated to this country. He made no impression on Wall street.

THE PEOPLE of North Carolina don't want any prohibition, and expressed their sentiments on freedom to imbibe or not unanimously in this week's election. It was the Governor of North Carolina who said—but every one knows what he said.

SOME INTERESTING DISCOVERIES have been made by the French consul in Lower Chaldaea. He finds things over 300 years old. Susan Anthony and Thurlow Weed have both sent on requests to have certain private trinkets of their younger days preserved.

THE MORNING DISPATCHES assert that the vote against the prohibition ticket in North Carolina will be overwhelming, and that we are chiefly indebted to the negroes for this happy result. Whenever you touch the negro on his personal weakness, he rises at once.

IT IS NOW definitely settled upon that Bookwater, Democratic nominee for the governorship of Ohio, is not, never was, nor ever will be a Democrat. His nomination was based upon his bar's of money. The Democratic party has had one experience with "bar'd" politicians in the case of English, a very sad experience, but Democrats never learn anything.

ONE OF THE NEW YORK papers has the following important statement to make. It says that Sam Ching, of New York, who has stores in Philadelphia, Charleston, Atlantic City, N. J., Washington and San Francisco, was arrested yesterday for robbing a Broadway firm and is now in the Tombs. Ching is wealthy, but he has been detected in committing several small robberies, and his store in Atlantic City when searched was found to contain $1,500 worth of silks and other goods. Mr. Ching is to be presumed innocent till proven guilty. Not a few of our citizens can display more silk than this, and yet are not open to such a charge.

WE COMMENT the following to the thoughtful attention of gentlemen and ladies who don't believe in pork. It is from the Kansas City Times:
 The Hon. Levi P. Morton, minister extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the Republic of France, has arrived at the seat of government to which he is accredited by the United States Government. He declares his first business will be to endeavor to induce the French government to rescind the embargo against American pork. We wish our minister success, and think he has fallen upon an opportune time to make his representations. France is carrying on a war in Africa, and "sow-belly" is worth more than cat to the tired and hungry army after long marches over inhospitable deserts.

If Mr. Levi P. Morton can discover any excuse for being a foreign minister at the high salary implied, he is entitled to the sincere thanks of the tax-payers in the country. They will appreciate it.

THE Post has not gotten itself into trouble. It has become the organ of people who have a grievance against Giteau. For instance, it publishes the following:

It appears that Giteau, who attempted to assassinate President Garfield on the morning of July 2, now wishes to be released from confinement on bail. Suppose the judge who hears his application for release on bail accedes, and he succeeds in finding persons acceptable to the court willing to go his bail? What next? When an atrocious crime is committed by a person for whose punishment existing laws provide no adequate punishment, what then? Let true men decide quickly and act without hesitation should the occasion offer. Vigilant.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.
 This is all wrong. The Post never understood to be gory till Stilson Hutchins removed his pistols to New Hampshire and his eminent son intrenched himself upon the seaboard. When they are both out of town, "Vigilant" is comparatively safe.

WITH THE convention of Straight-out Virginians Republicans, to be held at Lynchburg on Wednesday next, the last platform and programme of the triangular duel will have been laid down and mapped out. The fun will then commence in earnest, and the Old Dominion be the scene of one of the most bitter, hard-fought political battles in the memory of man. It will be a general mixture, as people of all classes and colors are represented in the Readjuster and Funder parties, and the hostility between the two is deep-seated and malignant.

It is not improbable that, in the convention of Wednesday next, a majority of the Straight-out Republican members will be found forming a coalition with the Mahone party. There will, however, be many who are dead-set against Mahone, and will cause a break in the convention if his friends are determined to coalesce.

THEY ARE ABOUT to celebrate the centennial of the German philosopher Kant. He believed that some things were so manifest as to be believed, and he did not waste his valuable time in trying to batter down the creeds of a whole world. He therefore deserves a centennial. He was a sleepy old fellow, and rather too deep for modern moods; but he had more sense than a thousand Ingersolls, who reach opinions without going through the formality of logic. The Brooklyn Eagle very truly says that in plain terms he affirmed something like this: My mind from its very constitution is compelled to believe certain things. I believe, thus and so, because it is impossible that I should not. In other words, he fell back upon the transcendentalism of Plato and the doctrine of innate ideas. The mind, he affirmed, started with certain innate qualities. Perhaps the best definition of the Kantian line of thought—for it could not be called a school of philosophy since it was essentially a reiteration of Platonism—is to be found in the familiar stanza of Wordsworth's "Imitations of Immortality," which the circumstances justify us in partially quoting:

 Our birth is but a sleep and a forgetting.
 The soul that sleeps with us, our life's star,
 Moves on, and leaves behind it, as it setting,
 And cometh from afar.
 Not in entire forgetfulness
 Nor yet in utter nakedness,
 But trailing clouds of glory do we come
 From God, who is our home.
 This beautiful stanza is the poetic expression of the transcendentalist's philosophy which refuses to limit knowledge by experience. It was Kant's mission to formulate and justify the Platonic dictum of innate qualities of the mind, and to resolve an acceptance of this doctrine into a necessity of mental constitution. No higher estimate of Kant's extraordinary mental and moral power could possibly be conceived than the cry of the profoundest of English transcendentalists, Samuel Taylor Coleridge, "Oh, that he might have lived, for he could have interpreted the universe."

Unseemly Wrangling.

Wash. Cor. N. Y. Herald.
 The public buildings and grounds in this city are in charge of Col. Rockwell, who has exclusive jurisdiction over them under the law. The District authorities have no right to inspect them without asking permission of Col. Rockwell or at his request. It is notorious that the sewer connections at the White House are imperfect and allow a constant flow of sewer gas into the building, there being no sufficient trap to prevent it. There is in this city an official whose duty it is to inspect all plumbing work. Were the same state of things as exist in the White House to exist in any private house in the city he would be able to enter it and make the necessary inspections. Between Col. Rockwell and the health authorities it is alleged that the feeling is not as pleasant as it could be. The chief of the Health office is Dr. Smith Townsend, who was the first physician to reach the President when he was shot at the depot, but whose services were afterward dispensed with by Dr. Bliss. While this friendly feeling exists under the law, there is no official intercourse between the two officials. The inspector of plumbing is ready to inspect the sewer connections of the White House, but it is said that Col. Rockwell has no faith in his ability, he having only occupied his present position a few weeks, and he has not, therefore, trusted him to do it. In the meantime nothing has been done toward correcting the evil referred to in these dispatches nearly a week ago, and the sewer gas still has an uninterrupted flow into all parts of the Executive Mansion except, perhaps, the President's own room.

It is recalled that when Mrs. Garfield was suffering from malaria last spring, and her case was said to be very close to a typhoid condition, the spring which supplies the Executive Mansion with water was carefully examined, and even the concrete pavement was torn up to discover whether the sewer beneath might not be the cause of the leakage of impure water into the course of the spring, by which the water used at the Executive Mansion was vitiated.

The above is a fair sample of sensational journalism, and another incident of the reckless system some Washington correspondents have been operating under of late—a careless way they have, in fact, of sending off stories based on rumors which they failed to take the trouble to authenticate. As a fact, the above statement from the Herald is purely a fabrication. There has been no trouble whatever between Col. Rockwell, the Health Officer or the Inspector of Plumbing. On the contrary, matters have been just the reverse. Some days ago when the question of the defective sewerage at the White House was being discussed, Health Officer Townsend addressed a note to Col. Rockwell requesting to know whether the District authorities could render any assistance in the matter of inspecting the sewerage in and about the Executive Mansion, at the same time tendering his own services and the services of the inspector. Col. Rockwell very promptly replied, presenting his thanks for the proffered aid, saying that he had consulted with Mrs. Garfield on the subject, who deemed it impracticable to institute an inspection until the President had recovered sufficiently to be removed from the mansion. "After the President has been removed," said Col. Rockwell, "we will institute an exhaustive inspection, and your kind offer will be cheerfully accepted."

The Kansas Delusion.

Cincinnati Times-Star.
 It appears that prohibition in Kansas is a delusion, after all. Judge Kingscott dismissed a case the other day, at the expense of the State, declaring that "the prohibitory amendment is unconstitutional and will not hold water." This decision is reported to have paralyzed the temperance people. Judge Kingscott is chief justice of a truly rural township near the Missouri line.

New England Looming Up.

The moonshiners appear not to be contented together to the South. There are still still even in moral New England some thrifty Vermonters have just been interrupted in trying to make whiskey without paying toll to the United States.

Cleveland Herald.
 Sitting Bull has been adding for the last few years in the Dominion of Canada, among the slow-going and conservative British. He never heard the snort of a locomotive until the other day, at Bismarck, D. T.

"Pints" in the Case.

Cincinnati Enquirer.
 Mrs. Peck, of New York city, died on Sunday last of over drink, as was supposed. She was equal to two gallons, and it is expected that the coroner's investigation will develop additional pints.

The Late Bird Catches the Chaff.

Philadelphia Record.
 Senator Davis got laughed at for his civil-service reform. The chaff is not so much for the civil-service as for the old bird so late in pecking at it.

A Historical Gun.

The Watervliet Arsenal a 12-pounder brass cannon with a history. It was captured in the siege of Yorktown by Lafayette. When the piece was being dragged into the American lines, it was struck by a British cannon ball, making an indentation which enabled Lafayette to identify the gun in 1824, when he visited the arsenal. Mr. Johnson, who was employed at the arsenal, states that he helped to row Lafayette across the river at Troy, fifty-seven years ago, and was present when he kissed the gun which was a reminder to him of his service in the Revolution. When Lafayette died the old gun was fired half-hourly from sunrise to sunset the day after the intelligence of that event was received. The Times thinks that it would be eminently fitting that the trophy should be sent to Yorktown to bear a part in the coming celebration there.

Chicago issues 5,000 drinking saloon licenses annually, and the daily death-rate averages 68.
 There are in Europe about 40,000 breweries, producing nearly 2,250,000 gallons of malt liquor.

Cremating a Queen.
 Consul Halderman, at Bangkok, reports to the State Department, under date of March 26, that the ceremonies incident to the cremation of the late queen and infant child have just terminated, after a duration of eleven days. It will be remembered that these royal personages were accidentally drowned in the Menam River on May 31, 1880.

For the two weeks last past Bangkok has been thronged with visitors from all parts of the kingdom, during which time the heat had been intense, the small-pox appalling and the dust barely endurable. The preparations for the ceremonies have been more elaborate and expensive than any ever before known in Siam, costing, it is said, $500,000 or more. The exercises consisted of religious rites after the Buddhist faith, processions, races, tournaments, tilting, boxing, wrestling, theatrical performances, games, fireworks, &c. Each day the king distributed as gifts among the assembled thousands large numbers of small Siamese gold and silver coins and lottery tickets enclosed in lines of red wax, which were eagerly struggled for alike by rich and poor, bond and free, peer and peasant.

On the 13th instant the remains of the late queen and princess were born in catafalque and procession with great pomp and ceremony from their temporary resting place in the palace to the pyramine or cremation building, where they were placed upon the funeral pile. On the 16th inst. the king applied the torch and lighted the pyre amid the lamentations of weeping women, children and priests. His majesty was visibly affected, and gave expressions to his great sorrow. On the following day the ashes were collected and, consigned to the Menam River. The uncounted bone relics were inurned in golden vessels and deposited with those of the royal family.

The diplomatic and consular corps has been specially invited by the king to witness these ceremonies, and throughout the same, attended by the foreign minister, they occupied choice positions for comfort and observation.

London Queen: "When you do not wish to look too conspicuous it is best to have the bathing dress of some neutral tint or dark color, and have a bright colored trimming. Black is particularly becoming for bathing costumes, as it shows up the whiteness of the skin, and it is convenient besides, because it can be trimmed with any color. It is upon the trimming of bathing dresses, in fact, that we must depend for variety in appearance. The actual make of a dozen dresses can only vary very slightly; but the color and designs of the trimmings may be infinite."
